

CT Payment Use Cases

Case Number	Use Case	Exists Currently?	Notes
1	Customer pays entire fee with Cash	Yes	Nothing needed here.
2	Customer pays part of the fee with available Cash on hand, then pays the remainder with Check	Yes	ATL doesn't take Checks at all, and realistically, most people (especially when they're travelling) DON'T have their checkbook with them, so this option is less useful than you think.
3	Customer pays part of the fee with available Cash on hand, then pays the remainder with a single Credit Card	No	This is more common (some people just don't like having cash on them, so they'll pay all of their cash, then try to pay the remainder with Credit Card)
4	Customer pays part of the fee with one Credit Card, then pays the remainder with another Credit Card	No	There are people who may not have a large enough available balance on one card to put the entire week (or two weeks) parking fee on a single card. Thus, they may want to be able to split it across multiple credit cards.
5	Customer pays part of the fee with a Credit Card, then pays the remainder with a check	No	This is highly unlikely but (if not too difficult to do) should still be an option. This is unlikely due to how few people carry their checkbook with them, especially when travelling.
6	Customer pays part of the fee with a Check	Yes?	I'm not sure if this particular combination works or not.

	Card, then pays the remainder with Cash
7	Customer splits the fee across three Credit Cards	No	This is somewhat unlikely; however, if the fee is large enough, there may not be enough available credit on just two credit cards to cover the fee.